

Arina Pismenny is currently a lecturer in philosophy at the University of Florida. Her research is primarily in moral psychology, ethics, and philosophy of sex and gender. Her recent projects include elucidating the relationship between romantic love, jealousy, and morality, analyzing the rational structures of affective states and complexes such as emotions, sentiments, and syndromes, and explicating the ways in which emotions can contribute to injustice.