

Laura Silva is a philosopher currently based at the University of Geneva as a Leverhulme Postdoctoral Fellow with the Thumos group of the Swiss Center for Affective Sciences. Laura completed her PhD on ‘The Rationality of Anger’ at University College London in 2019. She holds a BSc in Neuroscience from the same institution. Laura is interested in the nature and normativity of emotions, as well as their epistemic and political roles. Her work aims to remain sensitive both to relevant experimental work, as well as to the social reality in which emotions unfold.
