Storyboarding Science
Filmmakers teach scientists how to make impactful presentations

A workshop by Samer Angelone

Excellent relevant research often does not reach the people whose life is impacted by the research findings or who are subjects of the studies. This workshop aims to introduce ways of communicating science in a more impactful way beyond scientific journals and academic conferences.

Angelone is a filmmaker and scientist. He is the founder of the Swiss Science Film Academy, and works as a jury-member for prestigious international film festivals. Angelone has directed several fiction and documentary films. He teaches 'Filmmaking for Scientists', 'Storytelling & Storyboarding Science', and 'Video-journalism for Scientists' at different universities, research institutes and film festivals.

Angelone holds two PhDs in Film Studies and Biology.
